Reader recommends Marshallese translations

Recently I had the opportunity to return home after a long absence. I arrived via Kwajalein airport and was thus subject to the visitor safety briefing. I was amazed that no portion of the briefing was offered in the native dialect of the Marshallese language.

I have been residing in the United States since my absence from my homeland thus I feel I have a decent understanding of the U.S. English language, however, this was of no avail as I found much of the briefings' discussion, terminology and instruction not understandable.

I feel my fellow Marshallese traveling from the outer islands into this environment are equally, if not more, perplexed by this procedure.

Why is the Kwajalein visitor safety briefing information not available in the native dialect of the Marshallese language?

I realize how inconvenient a bilingual approach in one setting would be. I understand the importance of the information being shared as the safety and well being of the visitor and facility must be addressed.

I know that the intent of the briefing is to be as minor an inconvenience as possible to the traveler so that they can move onto their final destination. I applaud the facility in the manner which they address these needs.

However, I believe their stewardship would be further served if their briefing also addressed the language and cultural diversity of the Marshallese people.

A recording of the visitor safety briefing in Marshallese on compact disc, cassette or TV played simultaneously during the English presentation could be an offered option.

A written handbook of the safety briefing in Marshallese with graphics and summaries could be offered.

Large placards in Marshallese highlighting and summarizing important and dangerous situations could be placed around the briefing room.

A version of the visitor's fill-in form should also be available in Marshallese.

Communicating in a bi-lingual environment makes true communication quite difficult if only one language is used.

I believe this action could better serve the Marshallese community and display to the Marshallese people that this facility values them and recognizes them as partners and the best of the best friend.

Huffing, puffing

Character building requires good examples

During the Halloween weekend, two unwarranted calls were made to Kwajalein Police Department. The calls were to report people "huffing" at the Richardson Theater. Both calls proved to be false. The people were simply watching the movie unaware that an overzealous person was scanning the moviegoers for illegal drug use.

The second call for huffing just so happens to involve my 11-year-old son and four other children who were sitting together in the bleachers. KPD arrived and pulled the five children out of the bleachers. They performed a presumptive test for huffing on the children. The test proved to be negative, but because of KPD policy, the children were taken to the police department. The parents were then called to claim their children.

I have high regard for the residents of this island who want to keep it a safe and great place to live, and sometimes that means sticking our neck out to protect those who don't want to be protected. Isn't it our duty to have solid information before calling law enforcement on someone?

This incident caused a great deal of fear and embarrassment for the children and anguish for the parents. If a person wants to exercise great personal character by being attentive to the possibilities of illegal drug use, then shouldn't they also have the same character to apologize when they are wrong?

None of these children ever received an apology for the false accusation and subsequent chain of events that ensued. Children learn good character from their elders, and events like this. These children could have learned a great lesson through this adult that when you make a grand stand and you are wrong, you should apologize for your actions and the problems that they caused. Now that would be good character!

THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS

The Hourglass is named for the insignia of the U.S. Army 7th Infantry Division, which liberated the island from the forces of Imperial Japan on Feb. 4, 1944.

The Kwajalein Hourglass is an authorized publication for military personnel, federal employees, contractor workers and their families assigned to USAKA. Contents of the Hourglass are not necessarily official views of, or endorsed by, the U.S. Government, Department of Defense, Department of the Army or USAKA. It is published Wednesdays and Saturdays in accordance with Army Regulation 360-1 and using a network printer by Kwajalein Range Services editorial staff.

KRS reaches without-a-lost-time injury milestone

Four million safe hours

By Mig Owens
Assistant editor

A wise sergeant once told COL Beverly Stipe, U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll/Reagan Test Site commander, "Accidents hurt. Safety doesn't. And being safe is like breathing. You don't ever want to stop."

As the installation commander, and therefore the island's official safety officer, it's Stipe's job to promote active and aggressive safety programs that teach the workforce to operate in this dangerous environment.

"There is no worse excuse in leadership than a failure or breakdown of good and enforceable safety habits," she said. "And no accident is unavoidable if we place the right amount of focus and attention on everything we do."

Kwajalein Range Services' and USAKA's approach to safety has paid major dividends over the past three years with significant improvement in safety performance, according to John Feldman, KRS Safety manager. On Tuesday, KRS achieved a major milestone — 4,000,000 hours continually worked (almost a year) without a lost-time injury.

He added that all employees should be congratulated for their efforts.

"Occupational injuries requiring medical treatment greater than first aid, known as OSHA [Occupational Safety and Health] recordables, are down 84 percent. KRS injury rates are 88 percent below industry averages according to Bureau of Labor Statistics data," said Feldman.

Mike Moore, Safety and Occupational Health manager for USAKA, functions as the principal staff advisor and technical consultant to Stipe on safety and occupational health issues.

"USAKA has not had a serious military or government employee accident for over a year and a half," Moore said.

He explained that events such as Safety Day, held Oct. 15, help people to learn more about what it takes to come to work healthy and return home the same way.

"Safety encompasses many elements: training, protective equipment, attitudes, behaviors, low to high-risk work activities, analysis and team work to keep people from getting hurt," Moore said.

Defining safety

Among the things Moore said he has learned in his 15 years as a safety professional is what is unsafe to one person is sometimes seen as being safe to another.

"Perceptions and attitudes about safety do differ," he explained. "The majority of people come to work each day and want to remain safe and uninjured. Very few choose to 'push the envelope.' But he said, 'taking shortcuts will eventually catch up with you and you will get hurt.'"

Safety roles

KRS and its safety staff work with Moore to ensure OSHA and Army Safety Program standards are used by military and civilian workforces to include Host Nation personnel.

"Mr. Pickler [KRS president] has been very proactive in the safety arena. His military background and corporate knowledge has been a tremendous asset to safety," Moore said. "He understands that a good leader sets the standard for safety by demonstrating commitment and 'walking the talk.' He also gets out of his office and sees what is happening." Moore said that by talking with people, Pickler has a better understanding of where the known or potential hazards are and in turn can take action to make things safer.

Pickler said he totally embraces a zero-accident philosophy and submits that safety is "the top priority in everything we do here in KRS."

"There is absolutely nothing that we do that is so important as to compromise any aspect or principle of safety. From the first day an employee or family member is assigned to a KRS project team site — here, in CONUS or in Hawaii — that person should be made aware of the fact that their health, safety and well-being are our primary concerns, and I have always related

Network hacking steals from us all

By Corinne M Brown

U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll / Reagan Test Site
Director of Information Management,
Information Assurance manager

By now all of you with accounts on the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll/Reagan Test Site business network have completed Information Assurance User Training and have signed a User Agreement form. You therefore already know what is and is not permitted on business computers throughout Kwajalein Atoll so I need not repeat all of that.

What you may not know is that there have been a number of local computer security incidents recently and all of them were identified using automated security tools. Once upon a time you could defy security rules and get away with it. Today's tools make it much easier to identify those who are breaking the rules and action is being taken against the offenders. This is bad news for people such as Stephen Johnson who broke the rules and is now facing possible jail time (see Honolulu Star-Bulletin article on Page 5 "U.S. computer operator charged").

Please believe there is nobody in information technology who sits in a dark room and plots ways to make your life miserable. We all experienced the inconvenience of having to change our password several weeks ago. This was based on a known compromise of passwords by one person with malicious intent. Currently, we are all adjusting to the password protected screen saver. A password-protected screen saver set at 10 minutes of inactivity is mandated by the Army. The unclassified banner is also mandated. Obnoxious? Yes! But think about it, would you leave your wallet unattended on your desk at work? Leaving your computer on and unattended is virtually the same. It is very easy for someone to access your account and your information as well as government information to which that they might not otherwise have access. But you trust your coworkers, right? Did you know that the vast majority of computer hacks and attacks come from within an organization, not from the outside?

Firewalls

What about the firewalls that keep you from getting to certain Web sites both at home and at work? All circuits on and off Kwajalein are government circuits and, therefore, there is a requirement to prohibit the transmission of certain types of information. We may refer to our local .com network as the "public Internet" but there is really nothing public about it. It is run by a government contractor for government and contractor employees and families and it travels over government circuits. It is provided as a benefit to island residents but there are certain government rules to which users must adhere to. Occasionally, legitimate Web sites get blocked. If you are blocked from accessing a Web site (either at home or at work) that you believe is erroneously blocked, contact Kwajalein Range Services IT Security at itsecurity-smcdck@usaka.smdc.army.mil. They can assess the block and reverse it if appropriate.

I ask you all to be on the lookout for e-mails that ask you to go to a Web link and enter personal information. These e-mails are almost never legitimate. They just want your information. This type of e-mail often appears to come from a bank or an Internet business such as eBay. Do not click on the links in the e-mail. If you want to verify an e-mail is legitimate, contact the bank or business directly using contact information at their known Web site or on your bank statements or purchase receipts. Don't be tricked out of your personal information.

Public Internet

Recently there was an article in The Hourglass about the new policies going into effect on the public Internet. This change was necessitated by local public Internet users with viruses that resulted in passing infected traffic and unintentional spam e-mails. The Internet service provider we use in Huntsville, Ala. has repeatedly threatened to shut down our service unless we clean up our traffic. With the new policies and equipment we will be able to identify and disable those users who are infected and sending spam, giving them time to clean up their computers while the rest of us continue to have uninterrupted Internet access. I urge you to look at this change as a good thing

- it will ensure continued Internet service for the island.

Security

Yes, many of the actions that are taken in the name of computer and network security are looked at by users as an evil plot to annoy but they are necessary and in the long run, they benefit you.

U.S. computer operator charged

A missile site worker loses his job and his security clearance over hacking allegations

By Debra Barayuga

Honolulu Star-Bulletin

A former civilian computer operator at a federal defense test site on Kwajalein Atoll has been charged with hacking into a U.S. government computer to disable the antivirus software so he could play computer games and watch pirated videos.

A criminal complaint filed Friday in U.S. District Court charged Stephen C. Johnson, 27, of Alabama, with unauthorized access to a government computer, a misdemeanor punishable by a year in prison.

Johnson made his first appearance in U.S. District Court in Honolulu Friday and was released on his own recognizance. Federal Public Defender Peter Wolff told the court that the case is expected to be transferred to Alabama, where Johnson lives, and that he will enter a guilty plea to the charge.

According to court documents, Johnson worked at a communications center at the Ronald Reagan Missile Defense Test Site, where he had access to nonclassified and classified government documents and computer systems. He had been working there for about 10 months.

During an interview with the FBI on Oct. 5, Johnson admitted to using keystroke logging and password cracking software to obtain and change his supervisor's password, and disabled the antivirus software so that he could play computer games such as "Heroes of Might and Magic" and "Red Alert: Command and Conquer."

He also said that everyday for the past five months, he connected a USB hard drive to the government computer so that he could watch pirated movies that he downloaded from the Internet.

Johnson has had his security clearance revoked and has since been fired from his job.

Pickler said that safety has always been his top priority from the day he entered military service until he retired more than 36 years later, and it has continued in that position in the civilian sector.

Sixth sense

What Pickler tells new KRS employees when he speaks to them at the company's orientation course is that their safety is his foremost concern, and that there are two aspects of safety that he believes to undergird the entire process of an effective safety program.

“The first is that safety has to become a ‘sixth sense’ in everyone on this project. It should be as important as the other five: seeing, hearing, smelling, feeling and tasting. If that's the case, then it will always be there with us in everything that involves the other five,” he said.

Secondly, Pickler said every person needs to know that he or she can call ‘time-out for safety,’ meaning that if anyone sees or perceives there to be an unsafe act taking place, then that person has his permission to call time out and stop whatever event or action is taking place until the unsafe condition has been favorably remedied.

“I believe it's as simple as that, and yet it is important for each of us to realize that whenever we fail to take action on an unsafe condition or event, then we have endorsed that event,” he said. “I've had to correct children playing unsafely two times recently, and both times involved being late to another event so that I could make the appropriate correction.”

Flight safety

Flight safety, Pickler said, is something he worries about as much or more than anything else, at the same time recognizing “we have the most experienced pilots and mechanics I have ever known in any location.

“The first place I visited when I took over as president of KRS was the Aviation Department and AirScan, our aviation subcontractor. Similarly, I visited AirScan headquarters in Rockledge, Florida, as the first stop on my transition to the island in early April 2005,” he said. “I felt it important to get a feel for the commitment to safety of our aviation subcontractor — and it is very strong — and I wanted to convey to them my personal sense of safety and the fact that my guidance to the aviation personnel is: You never fly under any marginal conditions (of weather, aircraft, maintenance or pilot conditions).”

If any of our aviators, maintainers or passengers feel uncomfortable with the flight conditions or the conditions of the aircraft, then they are not to fly, Pickler explained.

“We will depend on the vast experience of our pilots and maintenance personnel, coupled with a sixth sense of safety on everyone's part, to guide us to conducting only safe and reliable flying patterns,” Pickler said.

In that regard, USA-

KA invited the Aviation Resource Management Survey team from U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga., in August and also the Directorate of Evaluation and Standardization from the U.S. Army Aviation Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., in September to review the maintainability, reliability and condition of the aircraft the status of the helicopter training program and the proficiency of our pilots.

“The evaluators determined that our aircraft were being maintained in accordance with Army regulations and operated in a safe and professional manner,” Pickler said.

Safety concerns

According to Moore, some areas of ‘safety concern’ on Kwajalein are the island's bike-riding population and recreational water activities, “Our bike riders know better — it would be great to have everyone put a bike light on their mean machines and use them during night time or early morning rides. Letting your buddy or ‘buddette’ sit on the handle bars with you or ride standing on the rear sprocket bolts on your bicycle may be great for the Fear Factor TV show but not here,” he said. On the subject of drinking and riding, Moore said,

“I'd rather take my chances trying to walk home after a few drinks were downed versus challenging the coconut trees on an unsteady bike ride home.”

Water activities require precautions

as well, according to Moore. “God has provided us with a beautiful water environment to enjoying fishing, boating, diving, etc. I'd like to see folks plan better for these outings; just because some people are Kwaj or Roi ‘old timers’ there are still basic safety precautions to remember,” he said. “This could entail such things as ensuring that boat engine really does work well and all necessary emergency equipment is on board before heading out to Bigej for the weekend or do you really need to dive in a particular place when the tides, currents and ocean conditions are marginal?”

Safety culture

According to Pickler, the role of KRS is to take responsibility for all our employees and their families and friends to build the kind of safety culture that supports a zero-accident philosophy at USAKA/RTS and the other communities where we live and work.

“My personal safety plan was the first document that I completed when I became president of KRS,” he said.

“In like fashion, it was the first document I handed out to my senior managers, and I share it with all new employees during their orientation. Finally, my personal safety plan is framed and placed on the wall in my office so that it is the first thing I see when I look up from my desk. My desire is that everyone in KRS have a similar commitment to safety.”
